From the desk of the Garrison Commander

Many of you may have seen the CBS News Program "60 Minutes" on January 17th, which focused on domestic violence in the military. For whatever reason, "60 Minutes" decided not to use all the information provided to them by the Department of Defense and the Department of the Army. In his response to the program, Brigadier General Craig B. Whelden, U.S. Army Community and Family Support Center, said, "It is important for all of you to know that what you may have seen on Sunday was a mischaracterization of the truth when applied to the Army's Family Advocacy Program". I agree with his remarks. The truth is the Army has a very active domestic violence program that addresses prevention and treatment; and in fact the number of domestic violence incidences in the Army have actually decreased over the past several years.

Family violence is an offense against not only the victims but also against the core values of the Army. The Army's policy is to assess each situation based on the facts of that particular case. This process takes time, and extensive coordination between members of the multidisciplinary Case Review Committee (CRC) members. Commanders are aware of their responsibilities in dealing with domestic violence allegations. They are actively involved in the CRC process and are required to take CRC recommendations into consideration when taking or recommending disciplinary or administrative actions.

If you are living in an abusive situation, I urge you to seek help. Call the Family Advocacy Program at 242-7653 or 242-7589. Ask about shelters, restraining orders, and support groups. You may be entitled to financial assistance through the Army's Transition Compensation Program. Call now, there are resources on the installation and in our surrounding communities to assist you.

If you are dealing with a lot of stress or fear you might verbally or physically abuse a member of your family, the time to get help is now! Call Family Advocacy, Mental Health or the Chaplains.

Family Advocacy offers a variety of prevention programs. These include Parenting classes and support groups, Baby Bundles, Expectant Parent Classes, Couples Communication workshops, Marriage Enrichment Programs, Stress Management, Anger Management and many more. Call Lynn Dittrich at 242-7653 for more information.

Following this article are questions and answers that may address your concerns regarding the "60 Minutes" story. If after reading these you still have concerns please contact the Family Advocacy Program Mrs. Dittrich at 242-7653, or Dr. Tom Walters at 242-7589.

QUESTIONS & ANSWERS REGARDING THE ARMY FAMILY ADVOCACY PROGRAM

Q. Does the military have a problem with domestic violence because of high OPSTEMPO?

A. That may be a contributor because OPSTEMPO creates stress, and stress is frequently a precursor for family violence. We have a lot of very young military families who are still learning how to cope with stress. The military lifestyle is unique and puts a lot of stress on couples – frequent separations, long hours, worry about the service member being in harm's way. We provide a lot of support for our families and the good news is that overwhelmingly they cope well, without any spouse abuse.

Q. Does the military address domestic violence between unmarried or formerly married couples?

A. Only as a criminal matter. The DoD Family Advocacy Program is designed to provide treatment services in cases of spouse abuse, because under law, DoD can only provide treatment to family members of service members.

Q. What happens to spouse abusers in the military?

A. It really depends on the facts of the case. We only have jurisdiction over the service members on active duty. The service member's commander is notified immediately, and usually orders that the service member be confined to military quarters pending further investigation. If the alleged abuser is a service member, the commander considers the recommendations of the Case Review Committee and determines whether to order the individual into treatment, or to seek to impose disciplinary procedures under the Uniform Code of Military Justice. The commander may also seek to obtain the discharge of the service member from the military. If the abuser is a civilian, the investigation is turned over to the civilian law enforcement agency and the installation's personnel cooperates with the civilian law enforcement and legal authorities. (Note: At the Presidio of Monterey, cases are filed with the Magistrates Court or referred to the U.S. Attorney General for prosecution in federal court.)

Q. Why aren't service members automatically punished?

A. We prefer to treat them if we can, and we believe that we are successful in the vast majority of cases. There is no data that suggests a criminal approach (arrest and jail) is the best strategy in eliminating violence.

Q. What happens if the abusing service member is discharged from the service?

A. If the soldier is discharged for the actual spouse abuse, the spouse is entitled to transitional compensation based on the service member's pay for up to three years. The spouse also retains commissary and exchange privileges for the duration of the payment period. This helps the victim readjust to civilian life and reduces the victim's disincentives to reporting abuse.

Q. What happens to service members who abuse someone to whom they are not married?

A. The service member's commander is notified immediately, and usually orders that the service member be confined to military quarters pending further investigation. The commander determines whether to impose disciplinary procedures under the Uniform Code of Military Justice. The commander may also seek to obtain the discharge of the service member from the military.

Pick a new name for the Presidio of Monterey Annex

Some of you have requested a new name for the Presidio of Monterey Annex. We need suggestions. We will push the suggested name selected in the renaming process.

(1) The name must contain "Ord" (such as "Ord Military Community" or "Ord Reservation").

(2) "Fort Ord" is not an option. "Fort" is reserved for active military installations only.

Entries are due by Feb. 28.

If you have questions, please call Jay Price at (831) 242-5536. You can also e-mail your response to pricej@pom-emh1.army.mil or fax it to (831) 242-6608.

"Tai Chi" offered year around Your choice of two Tai Chi styles

POM - Price Fitness Center (Building 842) offers a choice of two Tai Chi classes. Join Tai Chi Instructor Leonard Han twice a week for either Course I: Traditional Chen Family Taijiquan Gong Fu Frame, or Course II: Tai Chi Chi Kung I - a short Yang style energy form. Han, the 59th Rumen Dizhi ("Indoor Disciple"), of Grandmaster Chen Qingzhou (19th generation direct descendent/successor of Chen Family Taijiquan), is also a certified instructor of the International Healing Tao - Taoist approach to healing and self-transformation brought to American by Master Mantak Chia.

Course I Description: Traditional Chen Family Taijiquan Gong Fu Frame - meets Monday and Wednesday, 5 - 6:30 p.m. This style is characterized by a balance of "softness and hardness" of energy, mostly absent in the practice of other styles of Taijiquan (Tai Chi). It is particularly well suited to people desiring to develop physical fitness, relaxation and concentration.

Course II Description: Tai Chi Chi Kung I (Short Yang Style Energy Form) - meets Thursdays, 6:30 - 8 p.m. This is a simple, yet powerful, early form of Yang style Tai Chi, which teaches the principles of body mechanics through the alignment of the bone structure with the force of gravity.

The cost: for either Tai Chi course is $60 every 4 weeks or $15 per class for walk-ins. Private lessons are $35. Pre-register and pay at the Price Fitness Center desk, or arrive early to register before the beginning of your first class.

What to bring/wear: Wear loose-fitting clothes (i.e. no Levi's or belts) and (preferably) flat-soled tennis shoes. Bring a combination lock for locker use to secure purse, wallet, or bags. To register: Call 242-5641 (Price Fitness Center). For more information about either Tai Chi course, call 373-4208.

Smoking Cessation Class

The next smoking cessation class will be held on:
March 1, March 4, March 8, March 11.

Classes will be held in Building 276, from 4-5 p.m. Military must attend all classes in order to receive the nicoting patch.

Attention: The first session on March 1 will start at 1530 due to the amount of paper work to fill out.

Dependents of active duty and civilian employees may also attend on a space available basis, however, we are not able to get the patch for you.

Classes are limited. Please call Lorna at 242-6962 to reserve your place.

Instructors needed for Military Family Team Building classes
(Spanish, Korean, German, and English-Speakers)

POM ANNEX - The Army Family Team Building Program needs more volunteers - particularly those who can assist foreign-born spouses in becoming more familiar with the military way of life.

Volunteers are needed for Level I (classes for those new to the military); Level II (classes for the emerging community leaders and family support groups); Level III (classes for the seasoned spouse who has 5-10 years experience in the military environment, advanced classes on Group Dynamics, Advanced Problem Solving, and Building a Cohesive Team). For more information, please call 242-6890 or 242-7660.

Top five education Internet sites for POM/DLI students

The five internet sites most recommended by the POM Education Center guidance counselor are:

- 1) DOD Voluntary Education Program at <http://www.Voled.doded.mil>. is the premier military education web site with over 1,300 pages. Undergraduate and graduate programs worldwide are provided through the Department. of Defense and the respective service education centers. All Navy, USMC, Air Force and Army education programs are included.
- 2) California Virtual University (CVU) at <http://www.virtualu.ed.gov> covers all of the 300-plus accredited public and private colleges/universities in California which offer on-line courses and degree programs. In effect for one year and almost 2,000 courses now available.
- 3) Free Scholarship aid information at two web sites at <http://www.fastweb.com> and also at <http://www.fastaid.com>. Free scholarship aid can be tailor-made for your personal situation through these sites. In the second site, you can look at the free scholarships which may be available to you.
- 4) Princeton Review at <http://www.review.com> reviews accredited graduate, medical and legal degree programs. It answers basic questions for anyone considering a graduate or professional degree.
- 5) The Army Institute for Professional Development at <http://155.217.35.238/accp/aipd.htm> provides the most efficient and effective way for soldiers to earn military education promotion points by enrolling in Army Correspondence courses.

Officer Students' Spouses' Club Scholarships available:

NPS - The Officer Students' Spouses' Club will provide scholarships to family members of NPS students, NPS or NSAMB military staff members or members of NPS tenant commands.

Two recipients will garner scholarships of $750, and one will receive a $500 scholarship.

The scholarships are awarded for tuition, books, student fees and other college expenses for either undergraduate or graduate students, full or part-time.

Applicants will be evaluated on merit, academic promise, participation in extracurricular activities and the ability to express their educational and/or career goals in an essay.

Two references are required. The applicant must hold a valid military identification card.

Applications for the scholarships are available at the Family Service Center, La Mesa Village. A complete application must be submitted to SGC Box #2010 no later than April 21, For more information contact Nancy Chapman at 649-8366.

Army manages DoD's
Cold War certificate program

Applications begin April 5th

Fiscal Year 1998 National Defense Authorization Act, the Secretary of Defense approved awarding Cold War Recognition Certificates to all members of the armed forces and qualified federal government civilian personnel who faithfully served the United States during the Cold War era from Sept. 2, 1945, to Dec. 26, 1991. Beginning April 5 you may apply for a Cold War Recognition Certificate if you qualify. Online application is preferred; however, the application form may be printed and mailed, or faxed with the required supporting documents. Online application and instruction will be available at: <http://147.103.18.232/> The application form also will be available through other sources to be announced. New soldier rucksack under development

(Special to Army News Service, Feb. 12, 1999)

NATICK, Mass. Technicians at the U.S. Army Soldier Systems Center, known locally as Natick Labs, are working on an improved load-carriage equipment system to replace the ALICE (All-purpose Lightweight Individual Carrying Equipment) pack. What, specifically, the new rucksack will be is undecided, but the ideas, needs, and recommendations of soldiers and their performance requirements are driving the train to create an ALICE pack replacement.

The proponent of the new rucksack is the Infantry School's Directorate of Combat Development, which has listed what requirements will be included in the new load-carriage equipment. Natick's Project Manager-Enhanced Soldier Systems and its Soldier Center of Excellence, are also working the project. The Military Performance Division of the U.S. Army Research Institute for Environmental Medicine, co-located in Natick, is working with SSCOM to evaluate load-carriage performance issues.

Natick conducted a study in which 2,000 soldiers and marines were surveyed to pinpoint ALICE system deficiencies and determine new load-carriage system requirements. The Infantry School DCD then hosted a "muddy boot" meeting at Fort Benning, Ga., where senior noncommissioned officers from various units met to discuss requirements for the new rucksack.

It was determined that the new system, the Modular Lightweight Load-Carrying Equipment (MOLLE), would be designed to increase soldier performance on the battlefield. The initial fielding of MOLLE is scheduled sometime in Fiscal Year 1999.

The MOLLE will be designed to increase soldier comfort, reduce fatigue, and increase efficiency; all of which will make the soldier more lethal and less likely to become a casualty. For example, ability to transfer the rucksack load between the shoulders and hips decreases the fatigue associated with carrying the rucksack entirely on the shoulders.

The ability to tailor the load specifically to the mission at hand through the use of removable components and pockets will maximize the soldier's ability to perform missions unburdened by unnecessary items while reducing the weight of the rucksack. Many of the component pouches are specifically designed to improve soldier performance and were based on recommendations from soldiers in the field.

Natick experts are determining the most efficient way to carry varying loads and are investigating the interaction between different load-carriage equipment and human performance. Through technology-based efforts, they are developing ways to measure the effects of various conditions, such as terrain, grade, etc., on load-carriage performance, and what effect different rucksack systems have on the ability to perform mission-specific tasks (firing weapons, throwing grenades, traversing obstacles, etc.).

Joint programs and field-testing are helping to ensure that soldier performance is not overlooked in the design of the MOLLE. Research initiatives at Natick are aimed at demonstrating the soldier's ability to perform while wearing different rucksack configurations and are being investigated through biomechanics, physiology, and measured soldier performance.

All of these research, development and engineering initiatives serve to decrease the fatigue associated with load-carriage so soldiers will be able to better perform in combat.

With the ALICE pack, in combination with the LCE, soldiers carry the entire load on their shoulders by not wearing a waist belt. There are many valid reasons not to wear the waist belt with the current ALICE pack, but this will not be the case with the MOLLE. In fact, the use of the waist belt in the MOLLE will increase the soldier's ability to carry a load.

Technicians are studying methods to balance the weight of the rucksack between the shoulders and the hips. For this to happen, the soldier must be wearing the waist belt correctly, which is not possible with the ALICE pack. The use of a waist belt has been shown in the laboratory and the field to improve performance in many mission specific tasks, including climbing over walls, low crawling, Military Operations in Urban Terrain conditions, movement from standing to prone for weapons firing and Individual Movement Technique, among others.

The new rucksack will be designed to leave the soldier with more energy to meet the mission objective and better able to fire a weapon, accurately throw a grenade, or execute other mission-related tasks. The MOLLE currently utilizes a single-padded waist belt. When a soldier doffs the MOLLE rucksack, the system's lightweight frame remains on the soldier as his fighting load.

The ability for a soldier to tailor his load specific to his mission has been a concern of the Army for some time. Units have different missions and equipment for completing that mission; even soldiers in the same unit need different equipment based on their squad position [rifleman, squad automatic weapon (SAW) gunner, assistant gunner (AG), radio transmittal operator (RTO), grenadier, etc.]. The improved load-carriage vest, in addition to being lighter, more comfortable, and made of nylon mesh, will be issued based on squad position so that each soldier has the basic load and pockets for his specific need.

Follow-on improvements to the MOLLE include development of Military Occupational Specialty-specific pockets/components based on soldier need. These pockets can be removed and interchanged based on the soldier's comfort, unit SOP, or special mission requirements.

The mission specific tailor-ability of the MOLLE will help to decrease the bulk associated with the ALICE/LCE. This means soldiers will not be carrying unnecessary items, which will decrease the weight of the rucksack. With the weight in the rucksack reduced, soldiers will be better able to perform their mission successfully and should recover from a mission sooner.

In addition to the tailor-ability of the new vest, the MOLLE allows the soldier to remove or add components [outside pockets, Single Channel Ground Air Radio System (SINGARS) pocket, detachable patrol pack, sleep system, etc.] based on mission need. This will reduce the soldier silhouette and load and make the pack less likely to catch on tree branches, Military Operations in Urban Terrain obstacles, and other snares. The MOLLE also has some definite advantages over the ALICE in terms of forward-thinking design.

A hydration system will now be included in the system. The hydration pocket doubles as a pocket for a rear-body armor plate, increasing the comfort and maintaining protection while wearing body armor with a rucksack. An outside pocket of the MOLLE system was developed specifically to hold a Claymore mine, so time is not wasted rummaging through the large internal compartment.

Behind the Claymore is a removable bandoleer capable of holding six 30-round magazines that can be slung for extra ammo or used as a means to re-supply an entire squad. A soldier returning to the Objective Rally Point for re-supply will always know where the extra ammo is in each rucksack, and because it can be slung, it will be able to carry enough ammo for many other soldiers.

The main rucksack has a smaller, easily accessible internal pocket designed to carry the SINGARS radio. This pocket is removable, able to be slung, and it will keep the radio from sinking to the bottom of the rucksack for easy access. Another benefit of the MOLLE is the ability to move the main rucksack on the frame, so soldiers carrying heavy equipment (AG, RTO, 11C's, etc.) can adjust the rucksack to increase the comfort and ease of carriage for their heavy equipment.

In addition to the ability users have to modularize and move components of the rucksack and LBV, all of the pockets can be attached to the new Interceptor body armor. Interceptor is being designed in parallel to MOLLE and is compatible with all MOLLE configurations.

For specific missions (room clearing, short duration missions, etc.), the MOLLE may be unnecessary because magazine pouches, grenade pouches, SAW ammunition pouches, and all other pockets can be directly attached to Interceptor and used with the MOLLE patrol pack. This is perhaps one of the best ways to demonstrate the benefit (in weight reduction and performance) of the MOLLE/Interceptor system modularity.

Commissary Set to Impose Fee on Dishonored Checks

Defense Commissary Agency Release

FORT LEE, Va., Customers who write bad checks in commissaries face paying a new administrative fee when the Defense Commissary Agency implements new business requirements recently passed into federal law.

"The great majority of our customers write good checks," said Richard E. Beale Jr., DeCA's director. "In fact, more than 99.8 percent of checks written to commissaries clear just fine. For the very few that don't, this puts our collection procedures in line with other retailers."

Beginning with checks presented at commissaries Feb. 1, an administrative fee of $25 will be assessed patrons whose checks bounce. The commissary will collect the administrative fee when the patron redeems the dishonored check. The only exception is when a check bounces because of bank error.

If dishonored checks are not redeemed at the commissary within 30 days, the military finance office may charge an additional $15 fee. If the customer takes no action, the finance office may deduct the debt from the military member or sponsor's pay. Military members will be held responsible for dishonored checks written by family members.

In Europe, the system works differently. Dishonored checks aren't sent to the commissary, but to the Subsistence Finance and Accounting Office, Europe. If dishonored checks are not redeemed within 30 days, the finance office may charge an additional $15 fee. If the customer takes no action, the finance office may deduct the debt from the military member or sponsor's pay. Military members will be held responsible for dishonored checks written by family members.

Previously, customers had a 30-day grace period to redeem their dishonored checks without assessment of an administrative fee or penalties by military finance offices. In fiscal 1998, patrons wrote 43 million checks to commissaries worldwide. During that same time, banks returned more than 71,000 patron checks to commissaries.

Customers made good promptly on most of those returned checks, with only about 22,000 checks eventually proceeding to debt collection. The new fees are expected to help further reduce the number of dishonored checks.

The change brings the commissary in line with dishonored check practices and procedures used by the commercial grocery sector, military exchanges, and morale, welfare and recreation activities, said Gary Lutz, DeCA's Director of Resource Management.

Signs informing customers about the new procedures are being posted in commissaries this month.

AAFES uniform catalogs offered online

WASHINGTON (Army News Service, Jan. 5, 1999)

Always free to U.S. service members, the new military clothing catalogs from the Army and Air Force Exchange Service are now available worldwide instantly via the Internet at www.aafes.com.

The Internet catalog version is designed to provide shopping convenience to active duty and reserve service members who live miles from military clothing stores.

Just as in the store, soldiers or airmen purchase clothing record items at the same price AAFES pays the supplier. Additionally, both the Air Force and Army military clothing catalogs have a variety of optional uniform items and accessories from which to choose.

Though identical in product selection, the electronic catalogs do not replace the paper versions, still available in clothing sales stores and stateside through request by calling 1-888-768-3204.

Featured in each service's catalog are the latest dress, service, physical training and battle dress uniforms, as well as boots, shoes, shirts and insignia.

Additional merchandise available to authorized customers includes luggage, shaving kits, watches, commemorative clocks and award cases, pilot sunglasses, knives, utility tools, and binoculars.

Listed catalog prices include delivery by parcel post. No handling fees are charged. Delivery via priority mail can be requested at additional expense.

Online purchases require a major credit card or Deferred Payment Plan account. Catalog orders processed by phone or mail can be paid for by check.

Equal Opportunity Advisors meet in Orlando

WASHINGTON (Army News Service, Dec. 14, 1998)

Some 300 equal opportunity advisors met in Orlando, Fla., Dec. 7-11 for the Army's annual EO Training Conference.

EOs work issues ranging from sexual harassment and ethnic and gender discrimination to extremist activities. Top Army civilian and military leaders shared their insights about the Army's EO "climate" and suggested how EO advisors from the active Army and reserve components can best serve the Army.

"I've been in the Army 33 years," said Brig. Gen. Clayton E. Melton, director of the Army Human Resources Directorate. "Today we have a much better Army than existed in the 1970s.

"Today, commanders are much more sensitive to issues, and they know if they're not, they will break their units," Melton added. "They know that in order to build unit cohesion, you have to have a command climate where everyone treats everyone with respect."

"We're growing more diverse in so many ways," said Secretary of the Army Louis Caldera. "It used to be when we spoke about diversity, it was about blacks and whites. Today, we have people from every corner of the world.

"There are Muslims and Buddhists. We have interracial marriages and people who speak many different languages," he continued. "Managing our diversity is important so that everyone's individual rights are respected."

Twenty-one years ago, as a junior-year cadet at the U.S.

Military Academy at West Point, N.Y., Caldera said he was serving as president of the Cadet Human Relations Council. Female cadets had just entered the academy and Caldera was troubleshooting potential problems.

Recently, Caldera said, a former fellow cadet told him, "You had a great impact on the way I've treated people." Caldera told the EO advisors, "You have that impact, too."

EO training and awareness are keys to the Army's success, said Sgt. 1st Class Joyce Walker, EO advisor at Fort Monroe, Va., "considering EO complaints often result from perceptions of a lack of respect. What people say or do is often a question of impact versus intent."

Each day conference attendees worked through a half-dozen EO-related scenarios and brainstormed solutions, all aimed at fostering harmony in the ranks.

"In 2020, we have to have an Army that has broad political support and support from society," Caldera said. "People will say, 'That's where someone from my background can be successful. The Army will make good use of my talents. I'll be valued as an individual.'"

The Army's mandatory "Consideration of Others" training, which begins with new recruits in basic training, has had a positive impact, Army officials at the conference said. More people are aware of what EO is about. And fewer people will tolerate behavior that violates EO standards.

Chief of Staff's 1999 Earth Day message

The 1999 Army Earth Day theme is "America's Army — Sustaining the Land We Defend." This theme underscores the importance of maintaining the environment as we train and support our fighting force. Each of us—soldiers, civilians and family members—makes a valuable contribution to this effort every time we act responsibly as environmental stewards. The Army has a long-term commitment to environmental stewardship. It is essential to sustain our training land and ranges—not only to hone our warfighting skills today and in the future, but also to ensure our children and grandchildren have a clean environment in the 21st century.

When most of us think of being environmentally responsible, we think of recycling, car pooling and picking up litter. The Army does all of those things in garrison, and wherever possible, we make similar efforts in the field. Commissioned officers plan training missions to reduce negative impacts on the land, noncommissioned officers teach soldiers to respect endangered wildlife in the field, our soldiers carry out their leaders' plans and policies, and environmental experts monitor training land and coordinate necessary repairs. By taking these extra steps, the Army maintains access to critical training areas while protecting natural and cultural resources. These proactive measures, along with a focus on pollution prevention, save millions of dollars that can be redistributed to other Army initiatives.

Our dedication to caring for the environment has not gone unnoticed. Last year, the Department of Defense awarded the Army eight of 15 possible Environmental Security awards. Those award winners, and every one, who makes a concerted effort to protect the environment and conserve resources, deserve our gratitude and praise.

Earth Day is an excellent time to renew our commitment to the preservation of the environment for the coming year. This April 22, I encourage you to take time to attend an Earth Day event; volunteer to help plan events for your installation, or simply look for small ways you can be more environmentally responsible in the course of your duties. Earth Day fosters a sense of community by focusing on our shared environment. This sense of community is crucial to soldiers who are spread across the globe to "sustain the land we defend."

Soldiers Are Our Credentials!

Army environmental program information posted on its web site including "Earth Day"

The Army Environmental Center has now posted updated information about this year's Army Environmental Awards program on its Web site at <http://aec-www.apgea.army.mil:8080/>

If you look at the round button at the upper left-hand corner of this home page, you will see that various subjects flash in and out of view, including Earth Day, "hot topics" and the Environmental Awards. Click there on the Environmental Awards banner as it appears, or any other hot topics of interest, and you're in. You can also use a pull-down menu at the bottom of the screen.

The Environmental Awards and Earth Day sections include information, press releases, tips for installations on conducting publicity campaigns, and in the near future a message on the environment from the Chief of Staff of the Army, which can be used in your post newspapers, etc., to highlight the awards program, Earth Day and other environmental initiatives you may decide to publicize at your installation.

For more information, contact Lori Davis at DSN 584-1272 or commercial (410) 436-1272, send e-mail to ladavis@aec.apgea.army.mil. Her e-mail address is also a link on our Web site.
